Horizon Veterinary Service presents...

You and Your Pet

Dear Dr. Wise: My adult cat has a problem with biting and scratching. Sometimes if I walk up and pet him, he will attack my hand. How do I stop this behavior?

Answer: Your cat's problem is very common. This behavior most likely started when he was a kitten and he was allowed to bite and play roughly with someone's hand.

Though this may seem like a cute behavior with a small kitten, it usually leads to problems as an adult cat. Never use hands or feet as toys or allow kittens or cats to play roughly or attack them.

The first step in changing this behavior is to never pet your cat when he is in a position from which he could start an attack, such as lying on his side. Only pet him when he is standing. Carry a water squirt gun or bottle with you if you suspect an attack and if he starts, squirt him until he stops.

Cats enjoy rough play, especially if they do not have other animals to play with, so give him an appropriate item to rough house with. Use a stuffed animal or stuffed sock to regularly engage him in rough play. When he does allow you to pet him without attacking, reward him with verbal praise and a food treat.

You must be patient and get all members of the household to handle him similarly. This process takes time but it can work.

If you have a question, write Dr. Wise, Indiana Veterinary Medical Association, 201 S. Capitol Avenue, Suite 405, Indianapolis, IN, 46225, or www.invma.org
