Eikenberry Trust can help county families of Riley Hospital patients

Comet staff report

Families from Carroll County whose children receive treatment at Riley Hospital for Children in Indianapolis can seek financial assistance through the generosity of a local resident.

Each year, families from Carroll County turn to Riley Hospital for Children more than 500 times, seeking medical care. Mae Eikenberry of Flora wanted to help those families.

Through her estate plan, she established the Mae N. Eikenberry Trust with Union Bank & Trust Co., now JPMorgan Chase Bank. Each year, the bank gives income from the fund to the Riley Children's Foundation to provide financial assistance for inpatient hospital charges incurred at Riley Hospital for Children. Any Carroll County resident whose child is treated at Riley may apply to the fund.

To apply, families must let the Riley Hospital social worker assigned to them know that they are interested in applying to the Eikenberry Trust and complete and submit forms supplied by the social worker.

Once the forms are received by the social worker, the social worker and hospital personnel (employed by Clarian Health Partners) will help determine any assistance for which the family may be eligible and if any state or federal program assistance or other discounts provided through Clarian will be applied first.

This program is one of a number of sources of financial support for families at Riley Hospital. For example, assistance may be available to families who may not want to ask for financial aid because of religious convictions or other personal circumstances. Families should ask their social worker about options for paying their medical bills.

Questions concerning the Eikenberry Trust may be directed to Bishop Law Office in Flora.

Health care seminar offered in Delphi

Comet staff report

Delphi United Methodist Church will sponsor a free health care workshop, Are You Ready? on Tuesday at 7 p.m. The seminar will address questions such as Do I need a will? What is a medical directive? Do I need a living trust? What happens to my healthcare and finances if I can no longer handle my affairs?

Information on options available to individuals and their families will be offered. There will be guidelines on when to act, where to act, documents required and where to keep them.

The presentation is for information purposes only. Those attending may want to discuss their wishes with their family and consult their attorney, accountant, or physician before finalizing decisions.

The community is invited to the seminar to be held at Delphi United Methodist Church, 118 North Union Street, Delphi. For more information, contact the church office at 765-564-3791.
