Living really holy and wholly real

By Pastor Chuck Compton
The title, "How to be Really Holy and Wholly Real" on the devotional in a recent Presbyterian Newsletter caught my attention. It seems that some people try so hard to be "Holy" that they cease being real and approachable. And some people want so earnestly to be real that they cease trying to be Holy. Even though scripture indicates that it is possible to be really holy and wholly real, I find it a path that I often step off. Being holy is, by definition, setting one's self apart for God.

In the end of Romans 5 and beginning of Romans 6, Paul is telling about people who realize that Jesus' gift of forgiveness is abundant enough to overcome all of the sin in their lives. Their response to this reality is to sin

Camden First Baptist celebrates 175 years

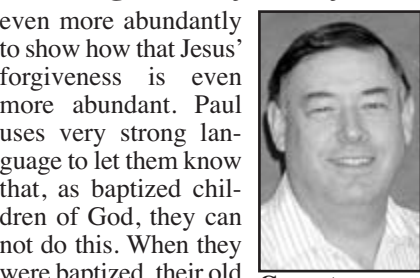

Camden First Baptist Church is continuing to celebrate its 175th year of spreading the Word of God. All are invited to a special day of activities on Sunday, June 29.

At the 9:30 a.m. worship service, the church will recognize and honor its 20, 30, and 40-year members.

Following church, a coffee hour with light refreshments will be offered.

even more abundantly to show how that Jesus' forgiveness is even more abundant. Paul uses very strong language to let them know that, as baptized children of God, they can not do this. When they were baptized, their old sinful nature died and they have been set free. Paul tells them that a new creation that is holy was resurrected from their baptism, and that they should never try to resurrect their old sinful life or sell themselves back into slavery to sin.

One of the realities for my life, after my month in the hospital last fall, was that my body no longer handles sugar and carbohydrates like it once did. I am struggling to learn what it means to live with a diabetic diet. I know that many of you have mastered such diets, and this may seem trivial to you, but I am struggling to know what to eat and what not to eat. Sometimes I am quite proud of myself because I have found items that are on my diet and my blood sugar level is very good. Then I go to a meeting and beautiful, delicious looking ice cream and cookies or plump, glazed, aromatic sweet rolls and I give in and eat some. My friends tell me that a little won't hurt me. Oh, I would never eat a whole donut or dish of ice cream like I used to do, but everybody else is enjoying these items, why can't I? Then I am frustrated because I have lost my focus and have given into my temptations, and my blood sugar level creates a dangerous environment for my body.

Holiness in my life is much the same. As long as I keep my focus on the one, Jesus, who made me holy in the first place and gave me abundant love to share with others, the environment of reality of my life is healthy. When I am tempted by my old sinful nature and lose focus, my environment becomes very toxic even if someone says "that's just reality".

Jesus suffered that you and I could live holy, healthy lives and that we would have the power to share that reality with others. I don't want to lose my focus. Do you?

Chuck Compton is pastor of Flora Presbyterian Church.

The Eternals will present a concert June 29 at Camden First Baptist Church

FOCUS ON THE FAMILY

By Dr. James Dobson

Fathers should create experiences with sons early on

QUESTION: My wife works hard to teach my sons to respect me as their father, and that makes my job with them easier. Even when she is upset with me, she never lets the kids know about it. Don't you think that is generous of her?

DR. DOBSON: She's not only generous — she's a wise woman, too. Mothers can help bond the generations together or they can drive a wedge between them. This concept was expressed beautifully in a book entitled "Fathers and Sons" by Lewis Yablonsky. The author observed that mothers are the primary interpreters of fathers' personality, character and integrity to their sons. In other words, the way boys see their fathers is largely a product of the things their mothers have said and the way they feel about their husbands. In Yablonsky's case, his mother destroyed the respect he might have had for his father. This is what he wrote:

"I vividly recall sitting at the dinner table with my two brothers and father and mother and cringing at my mother's attacks on my father. 'Look at him,' she would say in Yiddish. 'His shoulders are bent down, he's a failure. He doesn't have the courage to get a better job or make more money. He's a beaten man.' He would keep his eyes pointed toward his place and never answer her. She never extolled his virtues or persistence or the fact that he worked so hard. Instead she constantly focused on the negative and created an image for his three sons of a man without fight, crushed by a world over which he had no control.

"His not fighting back against her constant criticism had the effect of confirming its validity to her sons. And my mother's treatment and the picture of my father did not convey to me that marriage was a happy state of being, or that women were basically people. I was not especially motivated to assume the role of husband and father myself from by observations of my whipped father."

My overall research clearly supports that the mother is the basic filter and has enormous significance in the father-son relationship. Though Yablonsky did not say so, it is also true that a father can do great damage to his wife's relationship with their children. Very early on I found that when I was irritated with Shirley for some reason, my attitude was instantly picked up by our son and daughter. They seemed to feel, "If Dad can argue with Mom, then we can too." It became clear to me just how important it was for me to express my love and admiration for Shirley.

However, I could never do that job of building respect for my wife as well as she did for me! She made me a king in my own home. If our son and daughter believed half of what she told them about me, I would have been a fortunate man. The close relationship I enjoy with Danae and Ryan today is largely a product of Shirley's great love for me and the way she "interpreted"

"Turn to me and be saved, all the ends of the earth! For I am God, and there is no other." Isaiah 45:22 Pd. Adv.

me to our kids. I will always be grateful for her for doing that!

QUESTION: Having a child diagnosed with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder can paint a pretty bleak picture. Is there anything good you can tell us?

DR. DOBSON: There are some advantages to having Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder. In a sense, even the word "disorder" is misleading because the syndrome has many positive features. As Time reported, "ADHD adults see themselves as creative; their impulsiveness can be viewed as spontaneity; hyperactivity gives them enormous energy and drive; even their distractibility has the virtue of making them alert to changes in the environment. Kids with ADHD are wild, funny, and effervescent. They have lots of life." Let's not forget, also, that ADHD can be treated successfully in many cases.
