Housing grant

The two change orders by Star Development for homes in its program were approved. They are trying to keep the dollars allowed per home even and the change orders will allow for more efficient use of grant funds.

Bids were opened from two contractors interested in doing work on three other homes. One home is an addition to the program and the other two homes had significant changes that required the bidding process. These bids were taken under advisement and will be awarded at 6 p.m. Sept. 18 in the town office.

Ordinance 2008-3, setting rates for use of the community building were approved. The rental fee for the building is now $100 ($125 if the kitchen is included) with a $100 deposit. The building will remain rent free for non-profits but they will be required to sign a rental agreement and clean the building after use. Proof of liability insurance is still required from all parties.

Brian Foreman, Vital Signs, submitted two examples of town entrance signs and one was chosen.

The Preservation Society was recognized for purchasing the new town banners and Jeff Sieber and Ron and Diane Wertz for hanging them.

Discussion on a "No Burn" ordinance was tabled to allow for citizen feedback. Council member Richard Fite expressed concern for the people who have breathing problems.

Jerry Danner from the Lafayette Journal & Courier sought input on placing newspaper tubes out for quicker delivery versus throwing the papers toward porches. He was advised to ask customers what they prefer and report back.

The volunteer fireman's breakfast will be Oct. 4.

Groundbreaking for the Hoosier Heartland Highway is expected to be held Oct. 22 in Lafayette.

The next council meeting will be Oct. 9 at 7 p.m.

David Owen Justice

Services for David Owen Justice, 64, of Oak Park, Ill., were held Sunday in the Church at Pleasant Hill in Clinton Township.

He died Tuesday, Sept. 10, 2008, at his residence.

Born in Logansport, Sept. 29, 1943, he was the son of John T. Justice and Martha Been Justice. He was married to Marina Christensen who preceded him in death. In 1989, he was married to Pamela Tate, who survives.

A 1961 graduate of Logansport High School, he was vice president of Lifelong Learning and Suburban Campuses at DePaul University, Chicago, where he also taught and served as dean for over 25 years. He was educated at Wabash College, graduating in 1965, and at Indiana University, majoring in history, education and sociology. He also studied at La Sorbonne, in Paris, and taught and conducted research at Universitat Hamburg in Germany. He was visiting Professor of Education at the University of Memphis.

A varsity wrestler in high school and college, he was a nationally recognized educator and an innovator in adult learning. He led a team of American university educators to assist the new South African Republic's national program for education of adults whose learning needs had been ignored by the apartheid government.

At a critical moment in its organizational structure, he was appointed trustee of the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation at Taliesin, Spring Green, Wis., where his unique talent for achieving consensus without rancor brought about the revitalization of a national institution.

Deeply committed to the principle of education for all, particularly adult learners, he was the originator and the driving force behind the extraordinary growth of DePaul University's School of New Learning, a program especially tailored to the needs of adults who, because of circumstances or low expectations, had no chance of college just after high school.

In 2005, he was honored by the establishment of the David O. Justice Professorship of Developmental Economics at Wabash College, endowed by Bruce Baker, L.H.D., and created for the study of economic
