 For the express benefit of our many readers we will say that the rumor flashed over the wires here yesterday morning relative to the murder of Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt I in the jungles of Africa were false according to reports that we received at 10:45 yesterday morning just before going to press, from the Western Union Telegraph Company of Chicago.

Dr. A. J. came to town Tuesday and drove his auto into the Voorhees garage, where he left it standing while he transacted some business. During his absence someone monkeyed with the levers and when he "cranked up" the machine started for one of the large plate glass in the front of the garage. ## New health resources website offers information on free health clinics, medications and more

At a time when some people are having trouble paying for prescriptions and many more have limited or no health insurance, Butler University's College of Pharmacy and Health Sciences has created a website (<http://www.butler.edu/community-health>) aimed at helping consumers and health professionals obtain information about Indiana's numerous health services options, many of which are free or available at a discount.

The site, which was designed by a group of Butler pharmacy students and faculty, also reinforces the college's focus on public health, one that is supported by a $25 million grant from the Lilly Endowment.

Resources on the site include health centers and clinics, government and private programs for low-income or uninsured patients, prescription assistance and specialty pharmacies. Future plans include adding a section targeted specifically for seniors and a classified section where people can donate or sell medical equipment.

Annette McFarland, assistant professor of pharmacy practice and website project manager, said while there are other health resource websites, they generally only contain bits and pieces of information. "Our website is all-inclusive and focuses on the services available through the State of Indiana. It's basically a one-stop shop of all the tools and resources necessary to impact public health in Indiana."
